

International, interdisciplinary, American accredited graduate program in public policy in the heart of Central Europe

The Central European University (CEU), in Budapest, offers a truly international environment for research and study. Its 1,400 students come from over 80 countries. CEU welcomes talented students from all over the world. The language of communication and instruction is English.

The Department of Public Policy is committed to providing better training of civil servants and policy experts in the region and beyond. Teaching and research cut across disciplines and combine theoretical insights and practical experience. Close links with the policy-making community facilitate cross-fertilization. Graduate students and those with professional experience in the policy sector will find an attractive learning environment and resources for further developing their careers.

MA students may specialize in any of the chosen fields (streams) below:

Decentralized governance stream

Higher education policy stream

International public policy stream

European public policy stream

Media, information and communications policy stream

Cultural policy stream
